

The City of Seattle's Waterfront Seattle Program will transform Seattle's central waterfront to create a "Waterfront for All." Following the demolition of the Alaskan Way Viaduct in 2019, the new waterfront will feature new parks, viewpoints, public art, environmental benefits, and sidewalk, street and bike connections from Belltown to Pioneer Square.

The future waterfront will include:

- A wide, landscaped walking path and separate two-way bike route along the water for both commuters and families to enjoy.
- A rebuilt park pier where people can stroll, enjoy views and access the water with a new floating dock.
- A fully accessible walkway connection between Pike Place Market and the waterfront, including places to view, eat, shop and relax.
